  - (this demo was not recorded)
  - Sara Gould and Jenny Basford from the British Library gave this demo
  - this is about... <https://iro.bl.uk>
  - already had... <https://ethos.bl.uk>
    - exploring whether Hyku will be suitable to handle all of ethos in the future
  - Independent research organization
  - Decided to have own repo but also on behalf of others.
  - Launched shared repo process 18 months ago.
  - With Ubiquity and Hyku
  - Launched live in late November.
  - Will eventually extend to more organizations.
  - Features
    - search across organizations with items in repo
    - can go also go to each individually
    - support for embargo, including mix of embargoed and public within an item
    - Filter bar – resource type, collection, creator, institution, availability, keyword, language
    - featured collections, recent additions
    - analytics across everything, can also do it for individual organizations
    - Default Hyku with snazzy front end design over the top
  - Specific customizations by Ubiquity, to be eventually contributed back to community
    - created 11 new work types with specific metadata: article, book, dataset, exhibition, report, thesis or dissertation (exploring suitability; support for doctoral partnerships)
    - ISNI, ORCID (for authors and contributors), DOI integrations.

- clustered metadata — multiple authors contributors –
- Datacite supported outside of Hyku
- complex workflows, but works well
- Repository of Scotland eprints were mapped and imported (huge job/accomplishment) - field mapping and validation was a lot of work. Not within Hyku. Python. Partners are working on a community tool that will be made part of Hyku. Current solution is proprietary - great "Repo-importer" tool (Ubiquity).
- Content specific buttons in public interface (e.g. "open in viewer")
- Feel free to contact BL with questions or more information.
- Next f2f Partner Meeting: Emory University, Atlanta - Monday April 27th and Tuesday 28th (to lunchtime). Hotel suggestions and unordered list of discussion topics on the meeting wiki page.
